Understanding the value of maturity

To remain competitive in a changing marketplace, organisations continually strive to identify and leverage performance advantage from improved efficiency and delivery across their portfolios, programmes and projects. To do this, organisations must first understand what makes them perform well, where their weaknesses lie and finally, where they would like to be, so well-informed investment decisions can be made to achieve this.

So how can organisations effectively measure their performance?

In many sectors, management models have grown in importance as they help organisations assess their capabilities and identify areas for improvement. However not all models offer a holistic view and tend to focus only on process maturity and compliance within an organisation. One of the earliest and most well regarded maturity models in the portfolio, programme and project management sector is P3M3.

This maturity model is unique as it considers the whole system and not just the processes. It analyses the balance between the process, the competencies of the people who operate it, the tools that are deployed to support it, and the management information to manage delivery and improvements.

A P3M3 assessment across portfolios, programmes and projects will provide an organisation with a maturity level rating. The levels are:

- Level 1: Awareness of process
- Level 2: Repeatable process
- Level 3: Defined process
- Level 4: Managed process
- Level 5: Optimised process

The maturity levels enable an organisation to identify an improvement pathway along which they may choose to travel. They are a measure of an organisation's ability to deliver process maturity and compliance - the higher up the curve the more predictable the outcome.

But why is organisational maturity important?

A study by PwC found that organisational maturity is directly correlated with organisational success, therefore higher maturity yields higher performance. As with any investment in an improvement initiative, increasing the maturity rating should not be seen as a justification in itself. It is about improved capability to deliver strategic objectives, reduce costs and increase success rates. Every investment requires a justifiable return on investment (ROI).

Using P3M3 helps organisations to improve the likelihood of high-quality delivery outcomes. It achieves this by guiding organisations from immaturity, where project/ programme risk can be high and quality low, through to maturity, where risk is greatly reduced and quality increased.

it is important for any organisation to understand the maturity level that is optimal for it to maximise the value for money from its investments. Very few organisations are required to achieve the highest level and for many the middle levels may well be appropriate to meet the needs of their business and its aspiration. P3M3 helps organisations decide what maturity level they need to achieve to meet their business needs and provides a reliable baseline against which improvements in capability performance can be objectively measured.

How does P3M3 help?

To help organisations remain competitive, the P3M3 approach also provides a widely accepted independent benchmark against which an organisation's portfolio, programme and project capability performance can be objectively measured and certified. This enables a comparison of capabilities between organisations.

P3M3 also allows organisations to have an objective view of their maturity; and a structured process in which to drive improvements. This structure ensures the correct prioritisation and resource management is in place to drive forward transformational change which leads to decreased costs and improvements in on-time delivery, productivity, and customer satisfaction
